It was the first time I heard that we were going to have some company visit. I feel a bit surprise that how can I have this kind of opportunity despite being a first year undergraduate student. This is massive in terms of feeling, and for some people like me. Honestly, I had no idea about what kind of company it is. However, I thought it should be something really cool anyway.

At first, there were some people from Nippon Koei company who came to greet all of us and introduced themselves and their company. It turned out that Nippon Koei is huge a engineering consulting company which works on many projects of many kinds such as infrastructure, water sanitation, urban development. Thats the first time I actually got the idea what international development means. There are a lot of projects proceeding around the world and all of them make somethings better for many places all over the world. That impressed me a lot since I have always been fascinated on some kind of firms or companies who work with a goal to make quality of living better. I can felt passion from their presentation about a load of projects they have done so far overseas.

However, what I liked the most wasnt the presentation about company. I would say I love the moment I had some conversation with Morio-san and some employees there. Mr. Koji MORIO told us some kind of opinion and gave some advice on how should I move forward in japan. Some of their experiences gave me a boost and show me some ways that I could go about in the future. Its crucial for me since there are still a lot of things to be done in the future. Anything could happen. Nothing is impossible and I dont want to rule out any chances. Thats one of many things I learned from this trip.

Finally, I want to thank all of the GSEP professors for this opportunity and also thank Nippon Koei for giving us a lot of experiences and information which will benefit us in many ways.
